

Allowing increased single ownership of broadcast stations in a market area would eliminate contrary opinions as they would have no place to be heard. Information would be homogenized to appeal to the widest market and offend the fewest advertisers. Different opinions could easily be ignored and investigative journalism, already a dying art, will disappear completely. The goal of a government elected by an educated populace will disappear as the sources of news and information grow more narrow.